A FEW WORDS FROM YOURS TRULY

As I write this, it's almost a week after Election Day – a non-Presidential election year – in which I'm glad that things are (more or less) on the right track, at least politically. It also makes me feel – in a positive sense – that things'll turn out better over the next two years (and beyond). Which brings me to this:

Sometimes, who we view as the right candidates to represent us – not to mention those who lead the other nations of the world – aren't even qualified to do so. And in many cases, they were never meant to enter politics at all. If you need further proof of what I'm trying to get at – remember what happened slightly over six years ago. And remember what's happened ever since. We can't forget that – no matter how hard we try. And the worst part is – a certain ex-President who's largely responsible for this national nightmare is still on the loose and as obnoxious as ever, still determined to make a political comeback and return to the White House in 2025, which he'll never accomplish, if certain U.S. politicians – and our judicial system – have their way. Not to mention his own physical health failing, and definitely not helped by eating at a certain fast-food restaurant on a daily basis. (Now you know – to a certain degree -- why certain media personalities were never meant to hold public office.)

Based on what we've heard in the news over the past few days – things are somewhat turning out for the better, as far as U.S. politics are concerned. That's something to be thankful for, especially as we're approaching not only Thanksgiving, but also the upcoming Christmas holiday season, and 2023. Let's hope that we don't get a repeat of what happened in Washington, D.C. on January 6, 2021, okay?
